TUESDAY MORNING, JANUARY 4, 1859.

SCIENTIFIC FISHERMEN Professor Owen, at the annual sierce of the Leeds Mechanics' Institution, related the following anecdote: "Some of the working scientific men of London, with a few others, have formed a sort of club, and after our winter's work of lecturing is over we occasionally sally forth to have a day's fishing. We have for that purpose taken a Feb small river in the neighborhood of the metropolis, and near its banks there stands a little public house, where we dine soberly and sparingly on such food as old Isaac Walton Mh. loved. We have a rule that he who catches the biggest fish of the day shall be our president for the evening. In the course of one day a member, not a scientific man, but a high political man, caught a trout that weighed three Apr and a half pounds; but earlier in the day he had pulled out a barbel of half a pound weight .-So while we were on the way to our inn, what did this political gentleman do but with the buttend of his rod ram the barbel down the May 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 trout's throat, in which state he handed his fish to be weighed. Thus he scored four pounds. which being the greatest weight he took the chair. As we were going away for home a Jun man of science-it was the President of the Royal Society-said to the man of politics, "If you don't want that fine fish of yours I should like to have it, for I have some friends to dine with me to-morrow."

"My lord took it home, and I heard no more until we met on the next week. Then, while we were preparing our tackle, the President of the Royal Society said to our high political friend, "There were some very extraordinary circumstances, do you know, about that fish you gave me? I had no idea that the trout was so voracious; but that one had swallowed a barbel." "I am astonished to hear your lordship say so," rejoined an eminent naturalist; "trout may be voracious enough to swallow minnows-but a barbel, my lord! There must be some mistake."-"Not at all," replied his lordship, "for the fact got to my family that the cook, in cutting open the trout, had found a barbel inside; and as my family knew I was fond of natural history I was called into the kitchen. There I saw it; the trout had swallowed a barbel full half a pound weight." "Out of the question, my lord," said the naturalist; "it's altogether quite unscientific and unphilosophical." "I don't know what may be philosophical in the matter; I only know I am telling you a matter of fact," said his lordship; and the dispute having lasted awhile explanations were given, and the practical joke was heartily enjoyed."

LITERARY.

One year ago, or a little more, we were deluged from all quarters with floods of new publications, books of travels, orginal American novels, essays, text-books, &c.; many of them not wanting in merit, but with ninetenths, mediocrity was more than could be rightfully claimed for them. If their coming may not be compared with that of the frogs and the locusts of Egypt, their disappearance has at least been well nigh as total and as sudden. For the present they have been superseded by yet more ephemeral and transitory substitutes. The great firm of Harper & Brothers of New York, who formerly issued so many new works per diem, we now hear of almost exclusively as the publishers of Harper's Monthly and Harper's Weekly, counting their readers by hundreds of thousand. The first orator of the day has become, under the inspiration of Mount Vernon, a weekly contributor to the New York Ledger. The Atlantic Monthly is the publication por excellence of our modern Athens. Every where periodical literature is the absorbing attraction of the day. What does all this mean? Whither are we all drifting? Can such a state of things be a permanence? Certainly not. We are in the transition state of our literature, but where, when, or in what it will all end, it would now be hardly less than presumption to attempt to predict. Unquestionably, however, the extreme of the present will but result in a permanent and radical change for the better. Works of enduring merit and solid stability must sooner or later supply all this trash .- Letter from New York.

APT EPIGRAM.

When William Seymour was sent to the Tower for having married privately Arabella Stuart, in opposition to the command of King James, he met there a Scotch clergyman, named Melville, who had been imprisoned for making a sareastic epigram upon the altar of the royal chapel. He greeted Seymour with the following lines: "Communis tecam mihi causa et carceris, Ara

Rella tibi causa est, araque sacra mibi.

The Central Independent says, the words of women are more intoxicating than wine and dearer." Jones says it is so. It costs him $10 every time his wife calls him "My dear," while nothing less than $20 is deemed an equivalent for "Her dear Hubby."

CIRCUIT COURTS.—The Circuit Courts for this County are held by Judge John W. Ty-nently, has never yet had a rival. Volume after volume might be given from all parts of the world, and from the most intelligent, to prove that it is a perfect RESTORATIVE; but read the circular and you cannot doubt. Read, also, the following: The Hair.—People have for centuries been FAIRFAX.—COUNTY COURT.—The County court for Fairfax County is held on the third heretofore known, has been those abominable wigs. By a recent discovery of Prof. Wood, these articles are being fast dispensed with: but a great of different kinds. To all such persons, we car nestly make the request, that they will try once again, for in WOOD'S RESTORATIVE there is no such thing as fail. We know of a lady who was bald, who used the article a short time, and her head is now covered completely with the timest and most beautiful curls imaginable. We know of numerous cases where hair was rapidly falling out, which it restored in greater perfection than it ever had been before.

It is, also, without doubt, one of the best arti cles for keeping the hair in good condition, making it soft and glossy, removing dandruff, and has proved itself the greatest enemy to all the ills that hair is heir to. sonal appearance, though some may differ in regard to the ways of doing it; but every one will admit that a beautiful head of hair, either in man or woman, is an object much to be desired, and there are no means that should be left untried to obtain such a consideration .- Woman's Advocate
